

Greensborough

Your community is the largest urban region for more than 300 miles in each direction. Many people come to your community in search of a stable job, but overpopulation and homelessness have become challenges for the area. You rely on both surface and groundwater.

Newdale

Your community has become the largest in the region. It is located close to a large river. People here are active and often seek outdoor activities. Like many big cities, its population is diverse.

Bridgelyn

Your city is a medium-size community with developed services, recreation, and community activities. Your municipal water supply relies on groundwater supplies. You have multiple municipal wells, but some of them are old and may be vulnerable to failures—especially during a drought, when water demand is higher than under normal conditions.

Belcoast

Your community is a tourism-driven hub where reservoirs, inflowing rivers, forests, and monuments serve as the main attractions. Fishing, rafting, boating, and hiking are the main outdoor recreation activities. These activities depend on rich natural resources in the area. In recent years, more than 1 million people have visited the area. The large influx of tourists can have detrimental impacts on the area's natural resources, but it also contributes to the economy of the community. Some people rely entirely on income from services connected to tourism.

Skyview

Your town is located in the countryside and consists mostly of farmers and ranchers whose property is nearby. The nearest big city is 100 miles north of your community.

Silvergrass

Your community mostly consists of local ranchers whose pastures are located nearby. It does not have a hospital or professional firefighters, so it depends on community and personal resources and help from the state. It relies entirely on groundwater supplies.
